Historical note

Rembrandt Peale, the second son of Academy founder Charles Willson Peale, began his art study under his father, and at the age of twenty-four commenced a year of study under Benjamin West at the Royal Academy in London. He returned to America in 1803 and settled in Philadelphia where he painted portraits of distinguished citizens for his father's museum and as independent commissions.

In 1805 he was one of three artists among the seventy-one founders of the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts. He continued to be involved in the affairs of the institution until his death. From 1808 to 1810 he was in Paris, studying French painting styles and executing portraits of statesman and famous artists, including Jacques Louis David and Jean Antoine Houdon. After his exposure to the grand manner of French art, he returned to America hoping to achieve fame and expand his repertoire by painting large historical compositions. From 1823 until his death Peale painted no fewer than seventy-nine idealized depictions of George Washington.

After his last trip to Europe, he settled in Philadelphia, and spent his time producing copies of his most famous Washington image and lecturing. He also published several books on art or art practice, and taught drawing at Central High School for a few years. The Academy collection contains nineteen portraits by Rembrandt Peale.
