Historical note

From 1805 to about 1880, the permanent collection grew slowly and primarily by gift. Much of the collection consisted of European art. Purchases of works by American artists took place when opportunities arose to acquire an important piece, such as the 1836 purchase of Benjamin West's Death on the Pale Horse. In 1870, at the time of the sale of the Chestnut Street building, the collection included 161 paintings, of which 54 were by American artists, and 30 sculptures, of which 4 were by Americans.

In the last quarter of the nineteenth century, several large bequests enriched the Academy's holdings, with roughly half of each bequest consisting of European pieces. In the final decade of the century, purchases of American art, especially from the annual exhibitions, which now featured only native artists, increased sharply due to the bequest of Joseph E. Temple for the purchase of American paintings. The size of the collection grew, and its American focus began to take shape. Few European works were purchased after 1870. By 1890 the collection included 310 paintings, 128 of which were by American artists, and 57 sculptures, 8 of which were by Americans. Although no formal policy restricting the Academy's focus to American work was expressed until well into the twentieth century, its American emphasis became dominant by the 1890s.

Deaccessions of European art began in the late nineteenth century and have continued to the present. Today the collection encompasses more than 1,600 paintings, 350 sculptures, and 11,000 works on paper. The Academy has never collected decorative art.

Information about the history of the collection is extensive. Property registers and collection catalogues were maintained throughout the nineteenth century and were updated several times in the twentieth. The registrar maintains files on every object currently in the collection, and the Archives houses files on deaccessioned objects.

Exhibition catalogues for the collection have also added to the documentation. Before 1870, however, many catalogues intermingled works of art owned by the Academy, objects brought in for display in the annual exhibitions, and art on long-term deposit from private owners.
