Historical note

From the Academy's earliest years, the management of the school, like that of the museum, was in the hands of the board. Standing committees for both divisions were established in 1856 and all significant school decisions originated with the Committee on Instruction after that date. The committee carefully supervised the school curriculum, catalogues, admissions, and faculty selection. Implementation of the committee's directives was carried out by the curator, and in some years a small volunteer committee of artists. Around the mid-1890s the curator began reporting to the secretary/managing director.

While the Academy occupied its first and second buildings on Chestnut Street (1806–70), the institution's day-to-day manager was called the keeper and later the curator. His duties, somewhat akin to those of a porter, included opening and closing the building each day, admitting visitors, and some tasks related to the exhibitions in the museum, such as accepting deliveries of work into the building and collecting door receipts. Other duties were general or school-related, such as supervising models and properties and monitoring classes. The incumbent was usually an artist, who was provided with a small apartment on the premises. The few paper records created by these early curators are preserved with the records of the Committee on Instruction. The curators through 1870 were:

John Vallance (keeper) 1806–1812
Thomas Birch (keeper) 1812–1816
James Thackara (keeper, curator after ca. 1820) 1816–1828
Samuel Scarlet 1829–1838
Charles Suss 1840–1842
Eliza Suss 1843
No curator known 1844–1855
F. Radoux 1856–1858
Robert Wylie 1858–1863
Joseph W. John 1864–1870

After the Academy opened its new building on Broad Street in 1876, the curator's position became more specialized, entailing duties more specifically related to the administration of the school. After 1892 the occupant reported to the secretary/managing director who was the liaison with the Committee on Instruction. The curator corresponded with students, supervised models, the cast collection and props, and handled routine faculty matters. The position was called curator of the schools (or curator of the school) for most of the period from 1882 to 1960 and by more modern titles after that date.

Other sources of information on the school are board minutes and annual reports (see 1-B) and the files of the secretary/managing directors from 1892 to 1982 (see 1-D). Correspondence with faculty, segregated in the files of directors John Andrew Myers and Joseph T. Fraser, Jr. (see 1-D), and the minutes of the Faculty Committee (q.v.) also contain relevant material.

Curator (in the earlier sense of "Porter")

Curator of the School records (RG.03.01.01)

George W. Bartlett 1876–77

No curator known 1878–81

Curators of the Schools

Henry C. Whipple 1882–92 (and Librarian to 1903)

From September 1882 through February 1886, Thomas Eakins, the professor of drawing and painting, also carried the title Director of the School. As far as can be ascertained, the curator at this time reported jointly to both secretary and director. Eakins's successor, Thomas Anshutz, was not given the title of director.

Milton Bancroft 1892–94

No curator specified 1895–96 to 1905–6

Between 1895 and 1906 the school catalogues list no one as curator. John D. Pierce is indicated as secretary to the Committee on Instruction, and Hugh H. Breckenridge as secretary of the faculty. Letters addressed to either Pierce or Breckenridge, or in many cases, just to the Committee on Instruction, are interfiled for this period.

Scope and Contents note

The Archives maintains files of miscellaneous biographical materials on staff members. These include resumés, publications, speeches, newspaper clippings, obituaries, and memorial statements. Photographs of these individuals are found in both regular and oversize files. For any museum staff member who was an artist, the Academy library clipping files should also be consulted.
