Historical note

The first recorded exhibition of student work seems to have taken place in 1879, when 120 works were displayed in a separate gallery during the annual exhibition, a practice that ended by 1885. Printed tickets and checklists for a variety of student exhibitions, held at various times of the year, are preserved from 1895 forward.

Early in the twentieth century, a spring exhibition became a regular feature of the school program. This event functions both as a celebration of the completion of the school year and as a forum for the awarding of certificates, the M.F.A. degrees, and more than one hundred spring prizes and travel scholarships. (In the mid-twentieth century it was informally referred to as Cresson Day, a reference to the major travel scholarship.) Since the early 1920s, formal graduation exercises, an awards ceremony, and a guest speaker have been included, and the event is now officially referred to as the Annual Student Exhibition, M.F.A. Thesis Exhibition, and Graduation Exercises (ASE). Printed announcements for the exhibition, lists of prizewinners, and other documentation of the graduation day are part of the student records, above. An undergraduate degree program has recently been inaugurated, although many students earn a Bachelor of Fine Arts degree through the University of Pennsylvania cooperative program established in 1929. Many photographs of the ASE and of individual students can be found in the Academy's magazine.

Peale House I and II, the school buildings on Chestnut Street from 1964 to 1988, were also the locations of the Peale House Gallery. Until 1978 the museum ran a series of contemporary exhibitions there, as well as student and faculty shows in the summer. When the Morris Gallery opened in the museum in March 1978, the Peale House Gallery became a venue for student and faculty exhibitions and occasional one-person or thematic displays. The faculty organized this later Peale House series which is primarily documented by printed matter and a limited number of installation photographs.

With the 1988 move of the school to its 1301 Cherry Street building, a gallery on the ground floor provided a venue for student and faculty shows as well as a few small exhibitions related to alumni or other school affairs.
